Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. If you're making your own pork-bone stock, scald the chopped bones in boiling water, then simmer them with a little rock sugar, sea salt and a halved shallot (a pressure cooker is quickest). 1:43
2. For the filling, mince the pork and season it with the fish sauce, sugar, chicken powder, spring onion and pepper. Knead in the fish paste with the coriander, a little more seasoning and the chopped chilli for 2–3 minutes until springy, then chill. 3:12
3. Slit each bitter melon along one side, scoop out the seeds and scrape away the white pith, which is the most bitter part. 5:19
4. Blanch the melons for about 5 minutes in 1.5 litres of boiling water with 50 g sugar and 10 g salt, opening the slit so the water gets inside — it softens the bitterness and keeps them green. Drain. 6:04
5. Stuff the melons firmly with the filling, dab a little fish sauce over the exposed filling and pin each one closed with a skewer or blanched spring onion. 7:14
6. Put them in 1.5 litres of hot stock with the rock sugar, chillies and ½ tsp salt and simmer over medium heat, lid ajar, for about 20 minutes until tender. Roll any leftover filling into meatballs and cook them 5–7 minutes more, uncovered. 9:05
7. Season with the chicken powder at the end (fish sauce would turn the broth sour), simmer one more minute, then serve with spring onion, coriander and pepper. 10:23

> Tip A Tết (Lunar New Year) favourite, eaten with rice. Choose short, plump melons with big bumps — they're less bitter. It's salty as made; an unsalted stock cuts that. Fish paste is sold frozen in Vietnamese grocers.

The method is a summary in our words, in English — the video (in Vietnamese) shows every step.
