Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. If you start from dried beans, cook them in at least 4 times their weight of water with 2–3 garlic cloves and a little sage, barely trembling (never boiling) with the lid ajar, for about 2 hours. Salt only at the end. 1:40
2. Pour the oil into a tall pan and heat it. Peel the garlic, remove the green germ and chop it very finely. 2:37
3. Add the garlic to the hot oil, then the peeled tomatoes and a splash of water; keep a lid handy as it spits. 2:56
4. Crush the tomatoes, bring to the boil over high heat, then cook over medium heat for 15–20 minutes, until they break down and the oil turns red. 3:17
5. Add the beans with a little of their cooking liquid, bring back to the boil, then add the sage, salt (the beans are unsalted) and plenty of pepper. 3:54
6. Cook uncovered over gentle heat for 15–20 minutes more, until the beans turn reddish and the liquid has cooked away; keep the heat low so they don't turn to mush. 4:34
7. Taste for salt, finish with a little pepper and a drizzle of olive oil, and serve. 5:26

> Tip The cook says it serves 4–5; we use 5 as a side. In Tuscany it often comes with grilled sausages (salsicce e fagioli); it also goes well with roast chicken or eggs. 1 lb cooked beans is about 8 oz dried, or two drained cans.

The method is a summary in our words, in English — the video (in Italian) shows every step.
