Goi Cuon (Pork and Prawn Rice Paper Rolls)

40 min · Serves 5 · 358 kcal a serve · Video 4:52 · Chubby Whale

Dairy-free

Fresh herbs, lettuce and cucumber wrapped around lean pork and prawns, and the rolls are not fried: two rolls give about 22 g of protein and over half a day's selenium. Most of the fat and salt is in the peanut-hoisin sauce, so dip lightly.

Diet notes: Gluten-free with a swap: Rice paper and vermicelli are gluten-free, but hoisin usually contains wheat: use a gluten-free hoisin.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Cook the vermicelli per the packet and drain. Boil the pork in 1⅔ cups water until cooked, then plunge into cold water. Boil the peeled prawns in the same pot for about a minute, then simmer the heads and shells 10 minutes for stock. 0:08
2. Slice the pork thinly and halve the prawns lengthways. Snap the lettuce stems so the leaves lie flat and get the herbs, chives, cucumber and bean sprouts ready. 0:39
3. For the sauce, fry the garlic and shallot in the oil until fragrant, then stir in the hoisin, ¾ cup of the stock and the peanut butter. Add the sugar, sriracha and vinegar, simmer a few minutes and taste. 1:08
4. Wipe a rice paper on both sides with a damp towel and lay it glossy side down. Build a lettuce bed on the lower half and top with herbs, cucumber, bean sprouts, noodles and pork. 3:42
5. Roll halfway, fold in the right side, lay a chive along it, fold in the left side, set the prawn halves orange side down and roll up firmly. Serve with the sauce topped with crushed peanuts, pickled radish and carrot, chilli and crispy shallot. 4:10

> Tip Makes 10 rolls; 2 rolls a serve (our estimate). The cook prefers pork belly or a cut with some fat (she used tenderloin). Roll just before serving, as rice paper dries out quickly.
