Vegan · Gluten-free ingredients · Nut-free

Roasting the aubergines instead of frying them cuts the oil dramatically for this classic dish. It is vegan, gives about 11 g of fibre a serve, and is high in vitamin C and vitamin K from the peppers and parsley.

Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Peel the aubergines in alternating stripes, rub with salt and cover with water for about 30 minutes to draw out bitterness. Rinse, pat dry and cut a shallow slit along half the length of the best-looking side. 0:32
2. Rub the aubergines all over with olive oil, place on a lined tray and roast at 400°F for 35–40 minutes, turning halfway, until soft (or air-fry at 400°F for about 15 minutes). 1:24
3. For the filling, soften the onion strips in 1 oz olive oil over medium-high heat for 5–10 minutes. Add the chillies and pepper for a minute, then the garlic. 2:40
4. Season with 1 tsp salt, pul biber, black pepper and cumin, stir in ½ oz tomato purée for 30 seconds, then add the diced tomatoes and cook a couple of minutes more. 3:06
5. Open each roasted aubergine with two forks to make a pocket and fill generously. Dissolve ¾ oz tomato purée in ⅔ cup water with ¼ tsp salt and pepper, bring to the boil and pour over. 3:58
6. Bake at 350°F for 20 minutes until the sauce is glossy and thick. Scatter with parsley and serve with bread, rice or bulgur, spooning the sauce over. 4:40

> Tip Serves 4 is our estimate (one aubergine each). Add extra chilli to the filling if you like heat; it also makes a great sandwich filling. Good warm or at room temperature.
