Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Roast the whole eggplants over a wood or charcoal fire (or a gas flame), turning, until the skins are charred and the flesh is completely soft. Cool a little, then peel. 2:35
2. Chop the smoky eggplant flesh with a large knife until it is almost a coarse purée. 4:30
3. Peel the tomatoes and cut them into small dice. 6:20
4. Warm some of the oil in a frying pan, add half the garlic and cook gently until fragrant but not browned. Add the tomatoes with some of the salt and turmeric, and cook covered until soft and saucy. 7:00
5. In a second wide pan warm more oil with the rest of the garlic, add the eggplant and fry, stirring, until it has lost its water and darkened a little. Add the rest of the turmeric only for the last minute so it does not burn. 11:26
6. Tip the tomato sauce into the eggplant and stir them together. 17:40
7. Beat the eggs and pour them into a third pan with a little oil. Let them set softly, break them into large curds and grind black pepper over them, then fold them into the eggplant. 19:10
8. Cook on low heat for about 15 minutes, stirring now and then; if it gets too thick add a small glass of water. Serve warm. 22:30

> Tip In Gilan it is lunch with kateh rice; as a starter with flatbread, or with cauliflower rice, it stays low in carbs. Serves 8 is our estimate. Keeps 3 days in the fridge.

The method is a summary in our words, in English — the video (in Persian) shows every step.
