Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Steep the saffron in a glass of hot water (ideally the day before). Pick the leafy fronds off the fennel and boil them in unsalted water for 5–7 minutes; lift them out, chop finely and keep the water for the pasta. 2:23
2. Toast the pine nuts in a dry pan over medium-low until golden and set aside. Add 2 tbsp olive oil and toast the breadcrumbs, stirring, for about 5 minutes until golden; set aside. 4:18
3. Warm 4–5 tbsp olive oil over medium-low with the onion. Add a splash of water and the garlic, then the anchovies, stirring until they melt. Stir in the tomato paste, adding a splash of water if it dries out. 6:26
4. Add the chopped fennel and sultanas, then half the saffron water. Lay in the sardines and cook under 2 minutes without breaking them up. Season with pepper (salt only if needed) and add the rest of the saffron water as it reduces. 8:37
5. Bring the fennel water back to the boil, topping it up if needed, add 1 tbsp salt and cook the spaghetti until al dente. Save a mug of pasta water. 10:04
6. Drain the pasta into the sauce with the pine nuts and toss, adding splashes of pasta water so it coats the spaghetti. Serve topped with sardine pieces and plenty of toasted breadcrumbs. 11:08

> Tip The cook used canned Spanish sardines; fresh cleaned sardine fillets are traditional. Serves 2–3 (the cook's estimate).
