Method

TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Quarter the cabbage, cut out the core and cut it into 1½-inch pieces. Toss in a large bowl with 6 tbsp kosher salt and 1 cup water and leave 2 hours, tossing every 30 minutes. 1:29
2. Meanwhile stir the rice flour into 1 cup water and cook over medium-high heat, stirring, for 2–3 minutes until it bubbles and thickens. Add the sugar, lower the heat, stir 2–3 minutes more until slightly translucent, then cool completely. 3:12
3. Blend the fish sauce, cooled porridge, salted shrimp, garlic, ginger, onion and pear until smooth. Stir in the gochugaru, then the radish, carrot, chives and green onions. 5:42
4. Rinse the salted cabbage in cold water and drain, three times in all, then press out the excess water. 9:03
5. Mix the cabbage into the paste by hand until every piece is coated. Pack it into jars, pressing down firmly to push out the air, and cover. 10:08
6. Eat it fresh, or leave it at room temperature for 1–2 days until it smells and tastes pleasantly sour, then refrigerate (or ferment slowly in the fridge for about 2 weeks). Press it back under its juices each time you take some. 10:50

> Tip Makes about ½ gallon (about 4¾ lb, roughly 44 quarter-cup serves — our estimate). Maangchi adds a dozen chopped fresh oysters as an option. No salted shrimp? Leave it out. Top fresh kimchi with sesame seeds.
