Method TIMES = THE MOMENT IN THE VIDEO

1. Cut the brisket into large chunks and soak in lukewarm water for 6–7 minutes to draw out the blood. Meanwhile slice the radish and onion, and halve the daepa lengthways and cut it into 4–5 cm lengths. 0:05
2. Drain and rinse the beef. Put 1.5 litres of water in a pot with the beef, the green tops of one daepa and the kombu. Cover and boil hard for 10 minutes. 1:21
3. Lift out the kombu (leave the onion tops), add the radish, lower to medium and simmer 20–25 minutes with the lid ajar so it doesn't boil over, until the beef is tender enough to shred. 2:09
4. Lift out the beef and the onion tops. Add the onion, gosari and oyster mushrooms to the broth and let them simmer while you prepare the beef. 2:51
5. When the beef is cool enough, shred it along the grain (or slice thinly across it). Mix it with the garlic, cheongju, soup soy sauce, tuna sauce, gochugaru and sesame oil. 3:26
6. Add the seasoned beef straight into the boiling soup; the chilli flavours the broth without making chilli oil first. 4:54
7. Add the bean sprouts and plenty of daepa, top up with a little water if needed, season with salt and boil once more. Finish with a few shakes of black pepper and serve hot. 5:09

> Tip Serves 5 (our estimate: about 550 g a bowl with 90 g beef). Koreans eat it with rice; on its own it stays low in carbs. Keeps 3 days in the fridge and tastes even better reheated.

The method is a summary in our words, in English — the video (in Korean) shows every step.
